

Over expression

Over expression is when a gene is too active and produces too much of the protein it encodes. Normally a variety of molecular mechanisms ensures that genes are expressed at the appropriate levels at the right times. Many cancers arise through the over expression of key regulatory genes.