

Population

A population is a group of people who share a common trait. For example, they might have a certain disease of interest to researchers, have the same educational background or type of job, or they might live in a particular region.