

Proof of Concept [POC]

A proof of concept (POC) trial is one type of trial carried out early in the clinical development phase of a medicine (in humans). Phase II trials usually begin with a proof of concept trial, which aims to show that the medicine interacts with its intended target and affects the disease in question.