

Randomised participants

Participants in a trial who have been randomly (by chance) assigned to one intervention arm or another of that trial. Practical considerations, such as missing data over time, may lead to some participants not being included in the final analysis.