Sensitivity

Sensitivity (of an assay or test) is the ability of an experiment or trial to detect a difference — for instance, between two groups of participants receiving different medicines in a clinical trial.